

Jansen, Danielle

University Medical Center Groningen

Danielle Jansen is an associate professor, medical sociologist and head of the research program 'Integrated care for vulnerable children' at the Department of Primary- and Long term care of the University Medical Center Groningen in collaboration with Accare, an academic organization for youth mental health care. She also teaches two courses on medical sociology for bachelor students at the Department of Sociology of the University of Groningen in the Netherlands. Her research is focusing on assessing and improving health system functioning to meet the contemporary healthcare needs of children and adolescents. Danielle is a very successful project leader of several (inter)national projects (e.g. www.river-eu.org) and active in various national and international advisory boards and committees aimed at improving the health of children and adolescents in the Netherlands and abroad.