EUROPEAN HEALTH FORUM
GASTEIN

Cook, Rob

Rob is Clinical Director with the Economist Intelligence Unit (EIU) healthcare practice. He is responsible for the independent scientific outputs of the healthcare policy and clinical evidence consulting division. After studying Public Health at Auckland University in 2001, Rob became the Medical Director and Senior Project Manager for the New Zealand Guidelines Group. Since moving to London, his focus is how best to apply research evidence and knowledge to improve practice and policy. Currently he is deputy director of the UK National Institute of Health Research (NIHR) dissemination centre and a member of the Guidelines International Network.

Working across disciplines of policy development, implementation science, quality improvement, epidemiology and clinical research, he adds insights from clinical practice for policy, public sector and industry clients. Published on the EIU healthcare repository for white papers http://perspectives.eiu.com/healthcare

(last updated 28.09.2018)