Dragano, Nico
University of Düsseldorf

Nico Dragano is a Professor for Medical Sociology at the University Hospital Düsseldorf, Germany. His main fields of interest are psychosocial risk factors at work, digitization and health, health inequalities (general) and health care inequalities. He has long standing expertise in conducting (social-)epidemiology investigations on the interrelation of social and biomedical factors using large datasets from population based studies. Currently he is involved in studies on social variation in COVID-19 risks, and in conducting antibody studies in high risk populations. He is member of the coordinating committee of the German Public Health Network COVID-19.
