Hellowell, Mark
University of Edinburgh

Mark Hellowell is Senior Lecturer (Associate Professor) in Health Policy at the University of Edinburgh, with expertise in health financing, governance, strategic purchasing, capital investment, and public-private partnerships. Since 2022, much of his work has focused on Ukraine, where he has supported WHO and partners on health system recovery, health-care infrastructure planning, and the governance of the Program of Medical Guarantees. His recent work examines how, in a wartime context, emergency response, recovery, and reform can be connected, with particular attention to sustaining access to care, strengthening strategic purchasing, improving investment appraisal, and ensuring that reconstruction supports long-term health system transformation.
