Hofmarcher, Thomas
Swedish Institute for Health Economics

Dr. Thomas Hofmarcher is an Austrian health economist at the Swedish Institute for Health Economics (IHE). He conducts research on the economic burden of cancer and the value of patient access to new cancer medicines. A core focus of his work is the comparative analysis of cancer care systems around the world, covering all areas of cancer control (prevention, screening, diagnosis and treatment, survivorship). While most of his earlier work focused on Europe, recent and current work also covers the Asia-Pacific region, Latin America, and the Middle East and Africa.

His work has resulted in over 30 research articles, policy reports, and book chapters and has been covered extensively in international media. He is a regular speaker at international policy events and workshops. He has also advised the European Commission and the OECD in their work with Europe’s Beating Cancer Plan.

He is a guest lecturer at Lund University, Sweden and holds a PhD in Economics from Lund University.
