Health Data Hub

I am a German public health enthusiast working in France. In terms of education, I have a mixed background in international relations and epidemiology. In my professional career, I have acquired diverse experiences in the health sector: academic research (LSHTM), international organisations (OECD, CEPI), the private sector and the public health sector.

I currently serve as European and International Affairs Director at the French Health Data Hub, a French public body tasked with making health data available for research and innovation purposes. In my current role, I manage a team in charge of international collaborations and European affairs. At the European level, my team follows and influences European policy making in health data policy and coordinates and contributes to European funded projects. The Health Data Hub is one of the most active players in the set-up of the European Health Data Space for secondary use and a key enabler for supporting AI development and deployment in health.
