Hauck, Katharina
Imperial College London

Professor Katharina Hauck is Professor of Health Economics at Imperial College London and Deputy Director of the Jameel Institute. She is an internationally recognised expert in the economics of pandemic preparedness and health security. Her research combines economics, epidemiology, and health systems analysis to support policy decisions on prevention, preparedness, and response. Working closely with governments and international organisations, she evaluates the societal and economic impacts of health threats and develops evidence to strengthen resilient and sustainable health systems.
