

Knai, Cecile

London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine

Cécile Knai PhD MPH, French, is a Lecturer in European Health Policy based at the Faculty of Public Health and Policy, London School of Hygiene & Tropical Medicine. She previously worked at the World Health Organization's Regional Office for Europe (Copenhagen, Denmark) on food and nutrition policy. She is currently working on various aspects of European public health and health policy, most of which centre on the prevention and management of chronic diseases. This includes research on obesity and inequalities in Europe and analyses of the impact of voluntary and other policy options on public health. She also works on analyses of chronic care policy and practice across Europe (e.g. the use of disease management instruments such as clinical guidelines and care pathways, and tools to improve communication and continuity of care) both in national and cross-border contexts.
