

Makaroff, Lydia

European Cancer Patient Coalition

Dr Lydia Makaroff is the Director of the European Cancer Patient Coalition. She has over ten years' international experience in non-communicable disease research and policy development in academia, the pharmaceutical industry, and the non-profit sector. She conducted medical research during her PhD at the Australian National University and as a senior post-doctoral fellow at the University of Washington. After working in Global Market Access at a pharmaceutical company, she joined the International Diabetes Federation as their Epidemiology and Public Health Manager. She has experience quantifying the impact of non-communicable diseases, monitoring national governments' commitments to health, providing tools to Member Organisations, writing policy papers, and working with the European Institutions to advocate for change. Lydia holds a PhD in immunology and a Masters' degree in Public Health.
