Comparet, Marianne
International Society for Neglected Tropical Diseases

Marianne Comparet is currently Director at the International Society for Neglected Tropical Diseases, based in London. Marianne has nearly 30 years of experience in economic and social determinants of inequality and more than 15 years of experience in neglected and tropical diseases as director at ISNTD, heading global networks, policy dialogues, campaigns and events across a wide range of diseases and cross-cutting health issues. In this role, Marianne has in particular gained substantial experience of arboviruses and networks in this field, including heading the World Dengue Day secretariat. She is also part of the WHO's core working group on Skin NTDs Advocacy & Communications, was strategic director at Acting for Health, is on the Editorial Board of the Appropriate Technology Magazine and was foundational co-chair of the newly established Collective Action on Dengue initiative. She has an academic background in Development Economics, and has previously worked with the World Trade Institute in Bern, the emerging markets division of Citibank and at JP Morgan before joining The Economist Newspaper as Economist & Statistician.
