

Matschke, Moritz

Moritz Matschke, born in 1984 in Stuttgart, studied to become an environmental science technician first, with stations at BASF in Limburger-Hof, following a sabbatical travelling in Australia, witnessing the vast beauty of nature and the value of sustaining and protecting it together. He then studies economics at the European University of Applied Science in Brühl. There he gained deep knowledge in supply-chain and process-management, IT-project-management and innovation-management. After his studies he worked as an consultant across Germany and Europe. He worked in different roles in project management for small and medium enterprises, where innovation was implemented with small budget and small teams with a grass-root approach but also for big companies, where two-digit millions were invested and several teams worked to fully renew their existing IT landscape. In 2013 he co-founded the company HealthyWell -now Well IT. There he is responsible for the strategy, the key accounts and the development of new services and IT solutions. His drive is to creating patient centered communication systems that interconnect well and deliver shared value. He lives in Berlin.

(last updated 28.09.2018)