Mir, Ghazala
University of Leeds

Dr Ghazala Mir is Associate Professor of Health Equity and Inclusion at the University of Leeds with research interests in service development for those underserved by health and other public services and seldom heard in decision making about health policy and practice. She leads the multidisciplinary Inequalities Research Network and the international Partnerships for Equity and Inclusion, which bring together academics, advocacy organisations for excluded communities, public services practitioners and policymakers to identify ways of reducing the inequalities that affect disadvantaged groups.

Ghazala is currently a member of the Advisory Group for UKRI/UN Partnership on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNPRPD). She has previously been a member of the Government Task Force on Learning Disability and was Co-Chair of the Ethnicity and Learning Disability Subgroup. She has also contributed to Advisory Groups for various national bodies including the Department of Health, Care Quality Commission and Disability Rights Commission and has acted as a member of the National Institute of Health Research HS&DR Research Funding Board. Ghazala has substantial experience of translating her research findings into policy and practice through education and training, engagement with policy bodies and participatory research that brings together service users, practitioners and policymakers in order to reduce health and social inequalities.
