

O'Connell, Niamh

St. James' Hospital, Ireland

National Haemophilia Director, National Coagulation Centre (NCC), St. James's Hospital, Ireland

Professor O'Connell is a consultant haematologist at the National Coagulation Centre (NCC) in St James's Hospital and has taken on the role of national haemophilia director since early 2018.

Professor O'Connell completed specialist training in haematology in Ireland in 2001 and haemostasis and thrombosis in the UK in 2004.

The NCC is the lead comprehensive care centre for adults with bleeding disorders in Ireland and provides a hub of clinical services, research, training and education on a national basis.