

Rajan, Dheepa

World Health Organization

Dr. Dheepa Rajan is a Health Systems Adviser at WHO headquarters. She has been working in WHO's health systems division since 2006 and previously worked in clinical medicine and public health research in India and South Africa as well as at the Swiss Tropical Institute. She received her MD from the University of Goettingen Medical School in Germany and did her PhD on traditional medicine in India.

She is currently leading the development of a guidance book for WHO Member States on strengthening social participation mechanisms in health systems.