

Spencelayh, Emma

The Health Foundation

Emma Spencelayh is a Senior Policy Fellow at the Health Foundation, an independent charity committed to bringing about better health and health care for people in the UK. She is currently leading the development of a programme of work on business and economic strategies to improve health. Emma has over a decade of experience in designing, implementing and analysing health policy as well as operational management experience. Prior to joining the Health Foundation, Emma worked as a Senior Fellow at the Nuffield Trust undertaking policy analysis and commissioned research for the Secretary of State for Health. Before then Emma worked at a national government level at Department of Health and Social Care and had management roles within the National Health Service.

(last updated 28.09.2018)