

Sullivan, Alice

University College London

Alice Sullivan is Professor of Sociology at the Department for Social Science and Director of the 1970 British Cohort Study (BCS70) at the Centre for Longitudinal Studies (CLS), University College London (UCL). Alice's research is focussed on social and educational inequalities in the life course. She has made extensive use of secondary data analysis of large-scale longitudinal data sets in her research, with a particular focus on the British birth cohort studies of 1958, 1970 and 2000. She has published on areas including: social class and gender differences in educational attainment, single-sex and co-educational schooling, private and grammar schools, cultural capital, reading for pleasure, social mobility, health inequalities. She is currently PI of a Health Foundation funded project on 'The economic and social value of health from childhood to later life'.

(last updated 28.09.2018)